LABORITES CHART RENOVATION PLAN

Two-Year Crash Program Aims of British Revival

By SYDNEY GIBSON
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES
STARBOROUGH, England, Oct. 4—An outline of a Labor Government's list of legislative priorities was obtained here today as the party's annual conference closed with the traditional ceremonial singing of the Red Flag.

The party leaders are expected to be committing themselves on the floor of the conference to a legislative timetable, presumably to avoid any ammunition on the issue of nationalization to the Conservative Government.

But reliable party sources disclosed that the party's program was planned to do first, to add up to what would be a two-year crash program to start a social contract with the industrial sector of Britain.

The leaders told the conference especially that there would have to be priorities, and from what they said privately it appeared that there would be a small flood of controversial legislation to start the process of nationalization.

A Consolidation Period
It would be followed, if the present legislative program were to reap the fruits on the eve of a second national election.

Three nationalization measures for the first session of a Labor Parliament, the nationalization of the coal, road and road transport, would be returned to national ownership.

Immediate legislation would be introduced in the House of Commons to set up a commission to place land for development purposes in the hands of municipal corporations.

There would be some kind of provisions on building to prevent nonessential work and reduce building for houses, schools and hospitals.

More than a year ago, on Sept. 5, 1962, in what was described as the "second step," it was already announced that the United States policy not to export nuclear weapons and nuclear technology to the Soviet Union, and the United States for some time.

A public announcement of the agreement in principle followed a meeting between Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet Foreign Minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, in New York last month.

Details to be worked out by the two governments were announced in a separate declaration by the two governments.
